RAILWAY ANSWERS PROTEST PETITION

Great Falls and Old Dominion Company Files Answer to Patrons of Road with I. C. C.

The Washington and Old Dominion Railroad Company has filed answer to the petition made by patrons of the road to the Interstate Commerce Commission relative to poor service and unjust fares. The answer is signed by F. C. Wright, president, and Wilton Lambert, attorney for the company.

A general denial of the allegations contained in the petition of protest is made, and the company attempts to show that while the service was necessarily hampered while the line of the company was in the process of electrification, it is now fairly up to the needs of the traffic. The company denies that as a company it ever had entry to Union Station, declaring that the Blomont division of the Southern Railway ran its cars into the station over the lines of Pennsylvania Railroad and the Washington Terminal Company and that with the passing of the property to the ownership of the Washington and Old Dominion Company and the change to electric cars that privilege lapsed. The company declares that the running of the cars to Annapolis Bridge and the transfer to the business district over the lines of the Capital Traction Company is neither a hardship in point of time or cost of transportation. In fact, it is claimed in the reply of the company that the fare from most points on the line to Leesburg is less than it was when the steam cars were in operation.

CONTRACTOR LOSES ON NORMAL SCHOOL

Error in Item Included in Bid for Contract to Erect Structure Costs Allan T. Harrison $10,000.

On account of an error in the item of steel casings, included in the bid at $1,800 when the figures should have been $18,000, Allan T. Harrison, contractor for the new normal school building at Eleventh and Harvard Streets Northwest, will lose $9,000 on the work, according to information submitted to the Commissioners yesterday by Municipal Architect Ashford.

In addition, Mr. Harrison will have to pay a penalty of $50 a day for exceeding the time allowed in the contract dating from October 22 until the completion of the building. He asked the Commissioners for an extension of time, stating that it was necessary as the casings ordered in England had been delayed in shipment. District inspectors of construction investigated this request and reported unfavorably for the reason that the specifications did not require that the casings be made in England. The Commissioners declined to grant the extension.

The contract called for the completion of the building by July 12. The time was lengthened two months on account of a change of plans decided upon by the authorities. Another extension of twenty-nine days was granted on account of bad weather.

Mr. Ashford has reported to the Commissioners that the building is very near completion. He stated: "I shall report it as completed at the earliest time it could be justly considered completed. In order to relieve the contractor of the imposition of damages amounting to $50 a day, as it is realized that the contractor has little or no profit on the work, and the District will obtain the building at nearly $25,000 less than a fair cost, due partially to a mistake of nearly $10,000 in the contractor's proposal."

DESCRIBES ALLEYS.

Book on Back Streets of Capital Published.

Grace Vawter Bicknell has published an interesting booklet on "The Inhabited Alleys of Washington, D. C." in which she describes the tenement conditions in this city and the work being done toward eliminating them. Great interest has been aroused among the religious and civic organizations of the District in the problem of dealing with unsanitary and disease-breeding alleys. Attention was especially directed to the bad conditions obtaining in the alleys by the work of the Monday Evening Club, which recently published a compilation of all inhabited alleys in Washington.
